Case study:

You are a Colab student. Some of you could be Colab students working and studying at the same time and / or might be managing some competing personal priorities alongside your studies. From time to time, you may find it challenging to strike a balance between managing competing work obligations and other personal priorities and managing studies at the same time. Whilst managing the multiple demands of your career, studies, and personal life can be challenging, the key is identifying and developing a personal work plan, assessing priorities, and being well organised to manage a well-balanced approach to achieving your set goals.

This task requires you to evaluate and prioritise your current personal and / or work circumstances and living arrangements along with managing your studies and develop a personal work schedule that would allow you to achieve a good work-life balance. You are to identify two (2) of your personal priorities from within your domestic environment and/or work-related priorities, along with one (1) study plan for one module that you plan to complete that includes study time as per one module's requirements and completing assessments for that module within the expected duration of the study. The objective of doing this task is to ensure that you get a practical experience of developing a personal work schedule to meet the larger workgroup objective of achieving completion of a module/unit whilst working on competing priorities.
